

LEARNING FROM
The Minneapolis Truckers'
Strike of 1934

Keith Christensen

To Carina

First Edition, Version 3.5

Typefaces

Antonio, Bree, Myriad Pro, Chaparral Pro

Design: Keith Christensen

Minneapolis, 2017

Printed at Lulu.com

Project web site

kc.ampmpls.com/game-turn

LEARNING FROM
The Minneapolis Truckers'
Strike of 1934

Keith Christensen

Acknowledgments

GAME TURN HAS BEEN A PASSION PROJECT about the Minneapolis Truckers' Strike of 1934. I am one of many who feel inspired by the story and see its continued value. I am in good company commemorating this important event that won the right to unionize. I see it as more than labor history, it's what democracy can look like. It remains a model for change.

I first learned about the strike while living in New York City. After I started working with Mike Alewitz on his Pathfinder Mural in the late 1980s, he introduced me to Teamster Rebellion that told the story of these amazing workers who organized so brilliantly, bravely and effectively. As a transplanted Minnesotan I was drawn immediately to the local relevance. It was beyond compelling. Thanks Mike.

Many others have influenced and aided the project as well. I have a long list to share. From the beginning Peter Rachleff and Beth Cleary have offered the necessary and I think excellent context for artwork about a labor strike at the East Side Freedom Library. They have been more than encouraging.

The Remember 1934 collective have been my comrades in promoting the history and more importantly the relevance to today. Dave Riehle is the labor historian who personifies selfless commitment to cause. He's also the foremost expert on the strike so I've been fortunate to have had time with him and learn so much. David Sundeen and Linda Leighton shared their perspective as descendants with warmth and generosity. Gladys McKenzie has been a dynamo as she has lead the way with the descendant's oral history project. Gregory Pofert helped with proofreading and encouragement. The many others who were amazing to learn from and with include Randy Furst, Chris Sierres, Dan Ganley, Bob Kolstad, Linnea Sommer, Mike Wilkerson, Kristin Dooley, Jason Evans, Colleen Casey, Kieran Fraizer Knutson, Lisa Luinenburg, Jeff Pilacinski, Jim McGuire, John Hanson et al.

The theory for the approach to having the map photographs made by local residents stems from the work of Paulo Friere. His book Education for Critical Consciousness (1969) calls for democracy through "experiences in participation".

Primary historical sources have been the work of Brian Palmer, Revolutionary Teamsters (2014), William Millikan, A Union Against Unions (2001), Charles Rumford Walker's American City (1937), Mary Wingerd, Claiming the City (2001) and of course Farrell Dobbs, Teamster Rebellion (1972). The film Labor's Turning Point (1981), produced by Martin Duffy remains an important touchpoint for anyone interested in the strike as it was for me. The Minnesota Historical Society has been a great resource for documents, interviews and photographs. Also Workday Minnesota, a project of the Labor Education Service at the University of Minnesota, is an important community site for the strike (www.workdayminnesota.org).

Bo Jakobsson has been the amazing table engineer-designer-producer-welder-installer. Union workers at 7 Corners Print & Promo printed the gameboard on the large table top as well as managed all the custom elements for the installation; Paul Bengston was a pleasure to work with. Hart Hornor has been my able primary proofreader and word use advisor. Bill Gorcica and Laurie Leich introduced me to the game Sequence (developed by Douglas Reuter in 1982) that has been a major influence for the project. Kirstin Wiegmann and Jessica Fiala at Forecast gave me great counsel while the project was developed.

My wife Carina assisted in many ways, serving as My most perceptive critic and firmest supporter. Sons Jakob and Stellan have been my reason for being and so encourage me always. My colleagues and students at St. Cloud State University have been great co-learners for me. I'm grateful to friends and family who helped in many ways, we are more than ourselves. Thanks Lee, Carol, Dwight, Polly, April, Rick, Mona, Kortland, Marty, Ann, Paulina, Sofia, Mats, Dan, Magret, Casper and Owen.

Contents

Introduction	1
About the strike of 1934	3
On Strike! Minneapolis Goes Union by Peter Rachleff
Honoring the Fallen by David Riehle
Faces Then and There; Identifying strike participants
Seeing When and Where; A map of the 1934 locations
Game Turn Project.	12
The Game
Guidelines
Board
Cards
Drawings	24
Pieces of the Whole
East Side Freedom Library	28
Overview; A New Center for Labor History by Fred Melo
Seeing the East Side; A map of residents' photos relating to the game
Designing Play; Player input in design
Producing Play; The making of the project and inauguration
Remember 1934	33
Looking Back to Go Forward
Street Festival
Picnic
Plaque
Credits	42

Introduction

THE GAME TURN PROJECT is about the Minneapolis Truckers' Strike of 1934. It was conceived as a game in order to make it interactive and socially engaging. The elements of the project are a boardgame, cards, a book documenting the project as well as maps and a table that contains it. The project is installed at the East Side Freedom Library in St. Paul which holds a substantial labor archive. The custom designed table with banner is intended to signify it is more than a game. It is. The intent of this project is to convey the history in an accessible way, to show this story is usable today.

The relevance of the strike is made tangible with a map that shows the results of local community participation. Residents of the area were invited to play the game, learn about the strike and then make photographs in the district that interpreted some of the themes of the game. These included categories such as problems, solutions and context. The results were arranged on the map that shows scenes in the precise East St. Paul locations.

How

The project was funded by a Minnesota State Arts Board Artist Initiative Grant. It developed from my work as a public artist focused on social and political issues. The game format stems from my interest in games as a potent way to communicate. I have also taught game design and have made creative work involving games. Above all else I came to the project through my own self-identity as a part of the progressive movement. I'm the son of the working class and a union advocate. That led me to enthusiastically participate with the Remember 1934 collective, which has commemorated the strike for many years. I've learned much from the group and felt encouraged by its members.

Why

There are three main reasons for this project about a specific history conveyed through a game. One, the strike was important because it was a successful effort to make democratic change. Two, a game analogy is relevant. A game's strategy and social interaction clearly relates to how the strikers acted. Three, the outcome of the strike, much like a game, was uncertain. Just because your cause is right doesn't mean you will win. You need to act strategically and be organized in order to gain an effective result.

I welcome people to see that making social change demands creativity, strategy and understanding. The story is game-like. I hope it's meaningful as history and enjoyable as play.

ON STRIKE!

MINNEAPOLIS GOES UNION

(Conversations Between the Past and the Present)

BY PETER RACHLEFF

THIS YEAR marks the 83rd anniversary of the 1934 Minneapolis Teamsters' strikes. These strikes changed the course of history and the lives of tens of thousands of working people. They transformed Minneapolis from one of the country's most notorious anti-union citadels into a "union town." The story of this transformation still resonates with the challenges faced by working women and men in 2017.

In the late 19th century a vibrant and diverse labor movement surged in Minneapolis. Its native-born and immigrant members encompassed flour millers and barrel makers, railroad engineers, firemen, brakemen, and track workers, garment workers and laundresses, horse and wagon drivers, building trades craftsmen, skilled machinists and shop workers. They were affiliated with the Knights of Labor, the American Federation of Labor, the railroad brotherhoods, the Teamsters, and the American Railway Union. They participated in the Great Northern Railroad and Pullman strikes of 1894 and the organization of producers' cooperatives. In the early 20th century, many of them took part in the creation of the Industrial Workers of the World and the Socialist Party, and they challenged some of the biggest businessmen in the United States, including James J. Hill, Andrew Carnegie, and Charles Pillsbury.

Top: Local 574 Women's Auxilliary serving strikers at the commissary

Below: Button worn by strikers

But bankers, businessmen, and their political representatives launched a powerful counter-offensive to regain control of their workplaces and their city. The core of their strategy to eliminate unions was a double-blacklist (a refusal to hire union members and a refusal to extend loans to employers who bargained with unions). They created a new organization with a slippery rhetorical name – the "Citizens' Alliance" – not only to implement their strategy but also to spin it as a defense of individual independence. Their effectiveness won them the accolades of the National Association of Manufacturers, the National Civic Federation, Chambers of Commerce, and employers' organizations across the country. Minneapolis became an icon of non-unionism.

The Citizens' Alliance's success was devastating not just for unions but also for working men and women. Over the course of the 1910s and 1920s, workers were disciplined, fired, and blacklisted at the whim of employers. Although productivity rose with the introduction of new modes of work organization and new technologies, wages lagged. Workers struggled to support their families, let alone find economic security. And when workers organized to challenge the Citizens' Alliance, such as the election of Socialist trade unionist Thomas Van Lear to the mayoralty in 1917, the state provided resources, such as the Public Safety Commission, to limit and roll back their gains. The reign of the Citizens' Alliance seemed untouchable, despite the establishment of the Farmer Labor Party in 1924, the crash of the national economy in 1929, the election of Floyd B. Olson as governor in 1930, and the election of Franklin Delano Roosevelt to the presidency in 1932.

And then, in the winter of 1934, a small group of experienced, dedicated labor activists began to change the course of history. Several of them had been working in the city's coal yards, earning miserable wages for handling and delivering the coal that Minneapolisians used to heat their homes, apartments, and businesses. Members of the seventy-five member Teamsters Local 574, they initiated a strike on February 7 which spread within three hours to 65 of the city's 67 coal yards. They organized "inside" (warehouse and coal yards) and "outside" (drivers and helpers) workers together in an industrial strategy, and they ignored both the New Deal's weak labor board system and the cautious advice of the Teamsters' leadership. They relied on cruising pickets, who shut the entire industry in the midst of a cold snap. Two days later, the coal employers offered the union a settlement and the strike ended. An estimated 3,000 trucking and warehouse workers signed up to join Local 574.

In May, Local 574 called a larger strike, all across the city's market district. Again, they linked inside and outside workers, ignored the weak mechanisms of the government labor board, and relied on cruising pickets. Activists had built an impressive infrastructure – a

Police confronting strikers during the May strike

Local 574 strike headquarters

rented garage as a strike headquarters from which mobile pickets could be dispatched; a soup kitchen and an infirmary, fully staffed by volunteers, many from the newly organized women's auxiliary; a "committee of 100," mostly stewards from individual shops and warehouses, to make key decisions for the union; a committee of the unemployed, not only to prevent strike-breaking but also to advocate for those without jobs; a network of farmers to bring food for strikers and their families. They had also secured the support of other unions and the Central Labor Council. The strike, which lasted ten days, revolved around control of the streets. Despite police violence, the roving pickets were effective, and on May 25, employers offered an agreement, which the union accepted.

The ink had hardly dried on the agreement, however, when employers began to violate its terms. Over 700 complaints of discrimination were logged in June and early July. On July 17, Local 574 renewed its strike. This time, there were more than 10,000 participants, while 35,000 other workers engaged in a sympathy strike. The union mobilized its resources, adding a new weapon, a daily strike bulletin (the first ever in the U.S.) which they called The Organizer. Once again, control over the streets was central to the effectiveness of the strike and, once again, there was violence, even the deaths on both sides. 100,000 union members and sympathizers took part in a funeral procession for striker Henry Ness. The dispatch of the National Guard and the arrests and imprisonment of many union leaders could not bring the strike to an end. With pressure exerted by President Roosevelt and his emissaries, the Citizens' Alliance finally yielded on August 21, and employers were ordered to hold union elections, almost all of which ended in victories for Local 574 and the negotiation of collective bargaining contracts. This broke the more than two decades' reign of the Citizens' Alliance.

Here begins the story of Minneapolis' transformation into a "union town." Some 10,000 truck drivers, helpers, warehouse workers, coal heavers, and other unskilled workers not only won substantial raises, but they also got seniority provisions and a grievance procedure, both of which held a promise of justice in the workplace itself. Their defeat of the Citizens' Alliance and their success inspired other workers that they, too, could organize and improve their work lives, while their newly bargained wages and benefits pushed employers to raise their offers to their own workers. Rank-and-file teamsters' participation in the strikes and their continuing participation in the life of the union gave them a new awareness of their class position, in contrast with employers and in solidarity with other workers. Their experiences also fueled their sense of their own capacity and power. They shared their new consciousness with their family members, their neighbors, and other workers. They also embodied it in expressions of solidarity, from support for the women workers in the Strutwear Knitting strike a year later to the building of an interstate network of trucking workers, from Fargo to Omaha. Workers' activism in Minneapolis was becoming a rising tide which was lifting all boats, to use a later metaphor. Minneapolis had become a "union town."

This situation persisted for, perhaps, half a century, for two generations. It was normal for workers throughout the local economy to earn a living wage, or more, to enjoy healthcare benefits, vacations, and pensions, to gain access to easier assignments as their seniority grew, to expect a safe workplace, and to be treated respectfully on the job. This was especially true in unionized workplaces, but non-union employers felt pressure to provide similar conditions. It was not a labor paradise; workers still worked hard and often felt they deserved a larger share of the wealth they created. But many were able to buy cars and homes, send their children to college, and expect to enjoy their retirement years.

This changed abruptly in the 1980s and 1990s. Employers closed plants and exported manufacturing jobs abroad. They reorganized work through out-sourcing and sub-contracting. They chipped away at benefits, then wages, then unionization itself. While legislatures and judges weakened workers rights to picket, employers threatened those who still dared to strike with permanent replacement. The unionized cohort of the working class no longer enjoyed economic security, their ability to improve their own conditions was greatly diminished, and, increasingly, their role as trendsetters for all workers faded. By the turn of the 21st century, Minneapolis could no longer be called a "union town."

But workers' situations have not simply deteriorated; they have changed. Immigrants play an increased role in the economy and are more vocal, visible, and significant in the labor movement. Similarly, public employees, white collar workers, retail, service, and fast food workers have come to the fore. Like the coal yard workers in 1934 and so many others, these workers want to be paid a living wage, to be treated with respect, and to look forward to an improved life. 2014 is a great time for them to look back at 1934, to learn how a wide range of workers changed the course of history, and to consider how they might change this course themselves. Minneapolis can be a "union town" again.

The strike newspaper's agreement announcement

An earlier version of the article was previously published by The Twin Cities Daily Planet, July 17, 2014 www.tcdailyplanet.net/strike-minneapolis-teamsters-80th-anniversary/

Peter Rachleff is the founding co-executive director of the ESFL. He taught labor, African American, and immigration history for more than thirty years, primarily at Macalester College and Metropolitan State University. Peter's publications include Hard-Pressed in the Heartland: The Hormel Strike and the Future of the Labor Movement

HONORING THE FALLEN

A worker historian shares the story of Bloody Friday

BY DAVID RIEHLE

SEVENTY YEARS AGO A GROUP OF KILLERS left that building behind you—the one with the tower and the clock. That was then and is now City Hall and police headquarters. They drove directly down Third Street to this intersection. At 2:00 PM the walls of this brick canyon echoed with the sound of gunshots. When it was over, 67 men lay on this pavement with big, ugly holes in their bodies, with limbs and internal organs torn apart, Forty-year-old Henry Ness, with a wife and two children, died the next day. John Belor died on August 1st. Let us pause now for a moment of silence and reflection.

We have come together today to honor our working class soldiers of 1934, to honor their sacrifice, to say to our union brothers and sisters and to this community at large that we stand here on hallowed ground. This is our working class Gettysburg.

We meet here to celebrate the triumph of life over death, of freedom over oppression, and comradeship and solidarity over isolation and fear.

The employers thought they would break Local 574 with terror and bloodshed. They were wrong.

The citizens of this city rose up in their tens of thousands and repudiated this evil assault on innocent working men, fighting with their bare hands to win a better life for themselves and their families.

Seventy years ago on this very day, July 24, 100,000 residents of Minneapolis turned out for Henry Ness' funeral and followed his body to Crystal Lake Cemetery on the north side of this city.

Henry Ness did not die in vain. One month later the strike was won. Seven years later the truckers had tripled their wages. Millions of dollars that would have gone into the bank accounts of the employers went instead to working class families.

For three generations we have stood on the shoulders of these men and women of 1934, our grandparents, uncles, aunts, neighbors and friends, and we have lived better lives because of their sacrifices.

Now today, the employers want to take it all back. Make no mistake about it; they intend to push us back to the poverty of our grandparents and great-grandparents.

But it is within our power—within your power to say "No!" to say as they said in 1934 that by uniting, organizing and fighting for justice that we can build a better world, a world of abundance, free of oppression, violence and scarcity.

The people who fought this great strike were young, like most of you. Like most of you they had never been in a union before. They are speaking to you today, not as old people, but as they were then, full of energy and the conquering spirit of youth.

Look around you at this pavement and think about it as it was on Bloody Friday. Sixty-seven fallen human forms, in agony, with life's blood draining out of them.

Now think about these silent forms today rising from the pavement and reaching their hands out to you. Their struggle was not for a day, a year or a decade. It was for all time, as all great struggles of working people are and must be.

Reach out your hands to them and let the torch be passed.

Take an oath tonight that you will unite as they did, not in fear, but in confidence and exhilaration in the joy of struggle, and go forward to build a better world for our class, for working people.

We will not forget our martyrs of 1934 and we do not forgive their attackers, or those who stood behind them and gave the orders.

They made Minneapolis a union town. SWEAR THAT YOU WILL KEEP IT THAT WAY.

These remarks were presented July 24, 2004. It was at the One Day In July, Remembering 1934, When Minneapolis became a Union Town. The event attracted several hundred participants. David Riehle is Local Chairman of United Transportation Union Local 650 and a labor historian.

Behind: Dave Riehle pointing to the street where Bloody Friday occurred.

PARTICIPANTS

Faces Then and There

Who were the actors in the story?

The following photographs show many of the strike participants, those who were opposed to it, and some in between. Many more were involved than included in this list. In some cases photos of significant figures weren't available. The intent of this project was to focus on the narrow time frame of the 1934 strike. People are complex and the times were volatile so it is not surprising that some changed their perspective and views. For example Max Shachtman and James Cannon worked closely with as strike leaders. Both were leading international Marxist theorists and wrote effectively for The Organizer. Later they had a falling out and became rivals. Many others stayed life comrades and friends as evidenced by their participation in the anniversary events. A large number of the leaders were later convicted together in the first Smith Act Trials of 1940 and were imprisoned. The lives of many were affected by the strike and the times continued to change them later.

Vincent R. Dunne

Strike leader

Carl Skoglund

Strike leader

Farrell Dobbs

Strike leader

Marvel Scholl

Strike leader of Women's Auxiliary

John Belor

Strike participant and martyr

Henry Ness

Strike participant and martyr

Max Shachtman

Strike advisor, Marxist theorist, and writer of the Local 547's newspaper The Organizer

James Cannon

National Secretary of the Socialist Workers Party and major advisor to the strike leadership

Bill Brown

Strike leader

Harry DeBoer

Strike leader

Grant Dunne

Strike leader

Miles Dunne

Strike leader

Oscar Coover

Strike leader

Emanuel "Happy" Holstein

Strike leader

Carlos Hudson

Strike newspaper The Organizer editor

Meridel Le Seuer
Strike witness and author

Moe Hork
Strike participant

Chester Johnson
Strike participant

Harry Horazak
Strike participant

Jake Cooper
Strike participant

Leone Sunde
Local 574 Women's Auxilliary participant

John Hanson
Strike participant

Shaun (Jack) Maloney
Strike participant

Governor Floyd Olson

Negotiated for settlement

President Franklin Roosevelt

Pressured for the settlement but later prosecuted the strike leaders

A.W. Strong

President of the Citizens Alliance

Bill Dunne

US Communist leader who opposed the strike leaders (and brother of the other three Dunes involved with the strike)

A.G. Bainbridge

Minneapolis Mayor

C. Arthur Lyman

Businessman and Citizens Alliance member killed during the Battle of Deputies Run

Michael Johannes

Minneapolis Chief of Police

Daniel Tobin

President of Teamsters

Father Francis J. Haas

Negotiator for strike settlement

Seeing When & Where

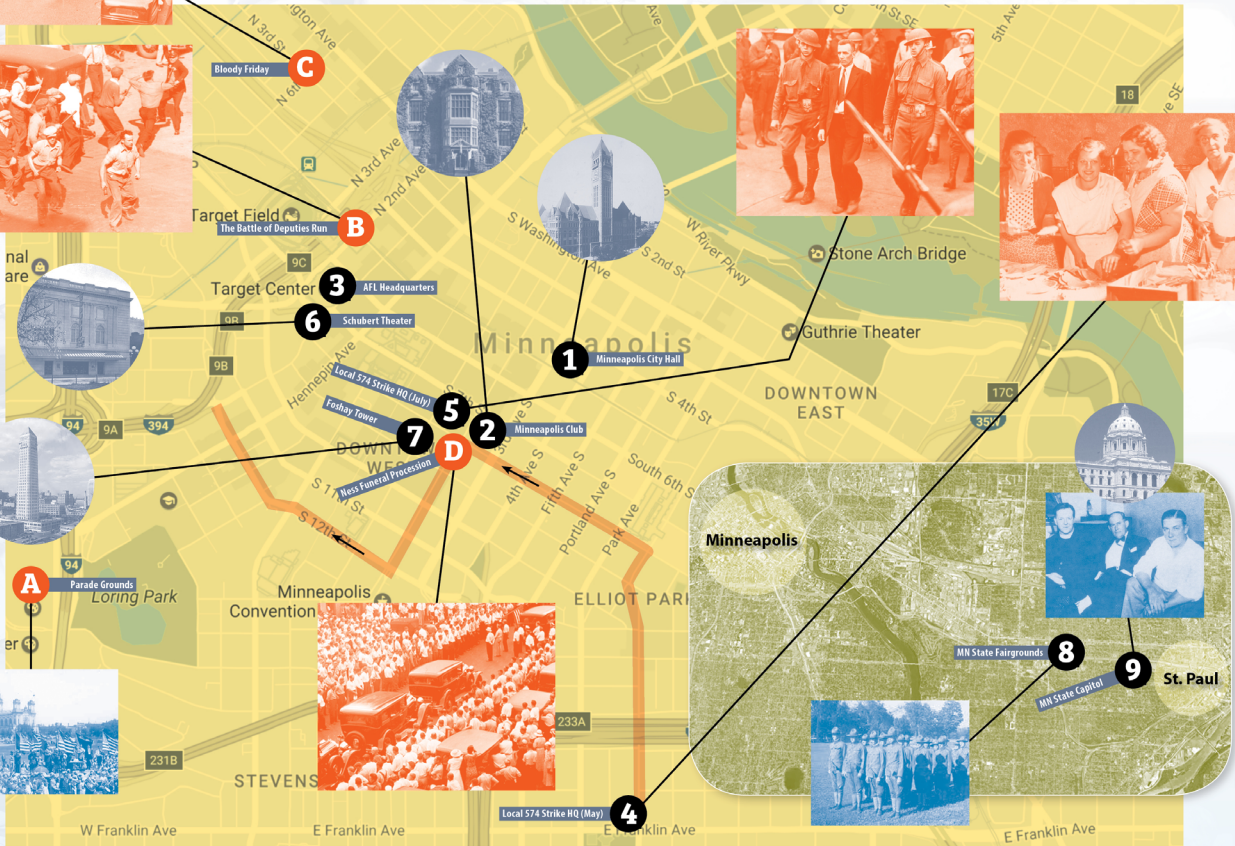

The 1934 strike played out on the streets and in the boardrooms of Minneapolis and St. Paul

THE MINNEAPOLIS TRUCKERS' STRIKE OF 1934 took place between February and August. The whole city became a battlefield of the opposing forces. Union leaders oversaw the strike from several union headquarters. The police, Citizens Alliance and National Guard directed the anti-strike activities from City Hall, the Minneapolis Club and the State Capitol. The strikers patrolled the city, guarding against strikebreakers. Police and their deputies harassed, attacked and apprehended picketers. The National Guard arrested and imprisoned the union leadership.

LEARNING FROM
The Minneapolis Truckers' Strike of 1934

TIMELINE The Minneapolis Truckers' Strike of 1934

- Events
- A PARADE GROUNDS RALLIES Kenwood Parkway & Lyndale Ave So./ Thousands gathered to support the strike throughout the summer of 1934.
 - B THE BATTLE OF DEPUTIES RUN 2nd Avenue and 5th St. No./ The city marketplace was a major conflict site between strikers, the police and (Citizens Alliance) deputies. Two deputies were killed on May 21.
 - C BLOODY FRIDAY 3rd Street and 6th Ave. So./ 67 unarmed striking workers were ambushed and shot by police on July 20. Strikers Henry Ness and John Belor were killed.
 - D HENRY NESS FUNERAL PROCESSION It began at 1900 Chicago Ave So. and ended at 12th St. and 1st Ave. No./ The column honoring the strike martyr on July 24 was witnessed by 40,000.
- Places
- 1 MINNEAPOLIS CITY HALL 401 3rd Ave So./ Mayor A. G. Bainbridge worked closely with Police Chief Mike Johannes to collaborate with the Citizens Alliance to suppress the strike.
 - 2 MINNEAPOLIS CLUB 729 2nd Ave So./ The Citizens Alliance members were active at this location.
 - 3 AFL HQ, THE COAL-YARDS STRIKE, PHASE 1 1st Ave & 6th St. No./ This was a small, sympathetic union office where the strike originated. The beginning strike action lasted from Feb 7-10. The National Guard raided it in August.
 - 4 LOCAL 574 HQ-MAY STRIKE, PHASE 2 1900 Chicago Ave So./ This was the HQ used during May 15- July.
 - 5 LOCAL 574 HQ-JULY STRIKE, PHASE 3 215 So. 8th St. So./ A large garage that provided commissary, medical facilities and other strike support services. This was the HQ used during July 16- August 21.
 - 6 SCHUBERT THEATER 7th St. and 1st Ave No./ A large meeting hall where strikers and supporters met on April 15. It helped galvanize and prepare them for the conflicts ahead.
 - 7 FOSHAY TOWER 821 Marquette Ave So./ The landmark and tallest building in Minneapolis was built in 1929.
 - 8 MINNESOTA STATE FAIRGROUNDS 1265 Snelling Ave No., St. Paul/ Arrested strike leaders were held by the National Guard in a stockade.
 - 9 MINNESOTA STATE CAPITOL University Ave W. and Rice St./ Governor Olson directed the negotiations from his office.
- Author: Keith Christensen
Sources: Dobbs, Farrell 1972, Teamster Rebellion/ Palmer, Brian D. 2014, Revolutionary Teamsters/ Riehle, David/ MINNEAPOLIS of the Minnesota Historical Society
Credits: Google Maps. Many photographic images used are courtesy of the Minnesota Historical Society

The Game

The art project's goal is to tell the important story of the 1934 Truckers' Strike in Minneapolis through game experience.

It's usable history and very relevant today. The project aspires to help players learn about some of the political and social issues of the times. The project includes maps and a small book that documents the game components, historical background, drawings, process and the East Side Freedom Library, its context. It also shares some of the commemorative events that the Remember 1934 collective has accomplished.

GAME TURN

Guidelines

GAME TURN IS DERIVED from an Appalachian card game called One-Eyed Jack. The game is strategic with some elements of chance. It challenges players to make connections between images, text and color. Choices are made within an increasing amount of complexity.

Game play involves strategy, competition, cooperation, bluffing and hopefully some laughter.

SET-UP

Players: 2-4 (individual and teams)

Equipment: Gameboard, chips, and cards

Gameboard: The board has 100 spaces; 2 spaces each of the card images (92), 4 Free Use spaces, and 4 Obstacle spaces

Cards

- There are 54 different picture cards
- There are 3 Free Use, 3 Obstacle cards and 2 Replace cards

Cards are in 6 categories:

- BACKGROUND (6 cards): historical factors that led up to the strike
- CONTEXT (8 cards): relevant issues and factors in 1934
- EVENTS (8 cards): specific incidents and aspects of the strike
- PROBLEMS (8 cards): specific challenges and opposition
- SOLUTIONS (8 cards): innovations, attributes and methods
- PROS & CONS (8 cards): complexities and contradictions of various factors and individuals involved

PREPARATION

- Set up gameboard
- Deal cards (7 for two players, 6 for more players)
- Cut cards; lowest number deals
- Play to win

TO WIN

A player or team makes a chain of chips:

5 chips of the same color in a straight line (any direction).

Variation: to complete two chain series

RULES

- Starting with the dealer, moving clockwise, each player selects a card of their choice from their hand and places it face up on a discard pile (each player has a discard pile)
- Each player places a chip on a matching space on the gameboard
- Free Use cards can be used on the Free Use space. Also each player can use 1 Free Use card as a replacement for any other card
- Obstacle cards can be used on the Obstacle space. Also each player can use 1 Obstacle card to take away another's chip (but not replace it)

- Replace cards can be used to replace any other chip with the player's chip
- A player making more than one chain connection may use any chip on the first sequence to make another chain
- Once a connected chain has been achieved it cannot be broken

Dead card

If you hold a card in your hand that does not have an open spot (because both spots representing the card are covered by a chip) you are holding a dead card. You may turn it in for a new card. When it is your turn, place the dead card on your discard pile and take another card. Then begin your normal play

Loss of card

If you forget to pick up a card after your play you are not allowed to take one later (yes you have to pay attention). You forfeit the right to have the full amount of cards. You will be at a disadvantage

Table talk

Strategy and game play hints not allowed

GAME TURN

Gameboard

The gameboard design is composed of 100 card images. These make the spaces that the chips are placed on. They are color-coded to distinguish the various categories. The objective of the game is to make a straight line sequence of five chips. Learning about the strike is incidental.

Cards

LEARNING FROM

The Minneapolis Truckers' Strike of 1934

THE GAME TURN PROJECT By Keith Christensen, 2017

THE PURPOSE OF THE GAME is to help players learn about the strike through play and conversation.

Objective

For individuals or teams. A player can win the game by scoring two sequences of 5 chips before their opponent does. Please see game instructions for details.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The project stems from the collective work of Remember 1934 that commemorates and promotes understanding of the continued relevance of the strike that made Minneapolis a union town.

The game is roughly based on the card game, One Eyed Jack and influenced by Sequence, created by Doug Reuter (1982).

Many photographic images used are courtesy of the Minnesota Historical Society.

Keith Christensen is a fiscal year 2016 recipient of an Artist Initiative grant from the Minnesota State Arts Board. This activity is made possible by the voters of Minnesota through a grant from the Minnesota State Arts Board, thanks to a legislative appropriation from the arts and cultural heritage fund.

There are 54 cards in the deck. 46 are text and images. Each of these cards identifies a topic of the strike history. These are organized in 6 categories: Context, Background, Pros & Cons, Events, Problems and Solutions. The intention of the card design is to convey the information in a grouping to help players easily understand that the topics are related. For example the Events category has the Battle of Deputies Run as well as the Bloody Friday scenes both in color green. The Problems category shows the Police, Red-baiting and Union Bureaucrats in blue. These are obviously simplistic and not intended to convey the complexities. It is a starting point in learning about this subject. There are also 8 cards that aren't conveying specific information. These are the Free Use, Obstacles and Replace cards. These are meant to be dynamic game elements that animate the play.

Chance

Free Use, Obstacles and Replace cards let players compete in more dynamic level of play. The other cards are restricted to the corresponding board images while these can be utilized in various ways. This allows for more creative strategies and moves.

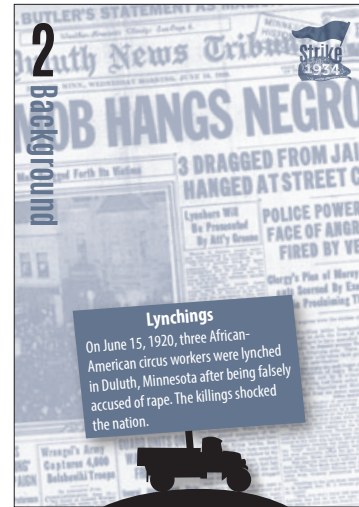

1
Background

Socialism (Debs)
Socialism is characterised by common ownership and democratic control of production. Eugene Debs was the party's presidential candidate and led the opposition to WWI.

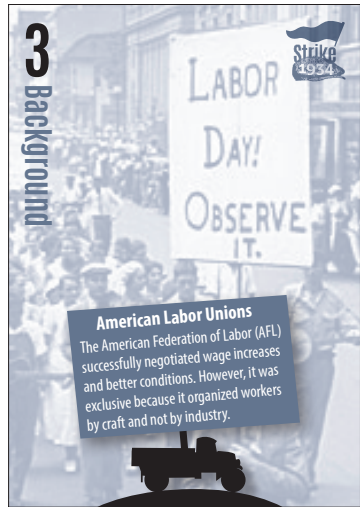

2
Background

Lynchings
On June 15, 1920, three African-American circus workers were lynched in Duluth, Minnesota after being falsely accused of rape. The killings shocked the nation.

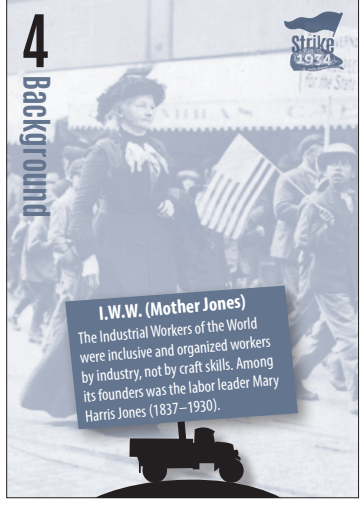

3
Background

American Labor Unions
The American Federation of Labor (AFL) successfully negotiated wage increases and better conditions. However, it was exclusive because it organized workers by craft and not by industry.

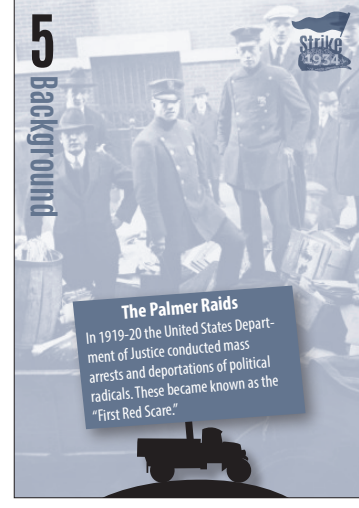

4
Background

I.W.W. (Mother Jones)
The Industrial Workers of the World were inclusive and organized workers by industry, not by craft skills. Among its founders was the labor leader Mary Harris Jones (1837–1930).

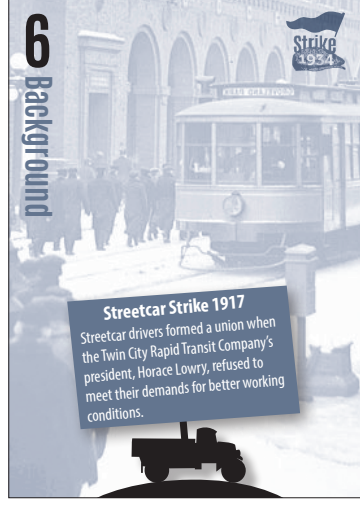

5
Background

The Palmer Raids
In 1919-20 the United States Department of Justice conducted mass arrests and deportations of political radicals. These became known as the "First Red Scare."

6
Background

Streetcar Strike 1917
Streetcar drivers formed a union when the Twin City Rapid Transit Company's president, Horace Lowry, refused to meet their demands for better working conditions.

Background

The category shares some of the relevant history leading up to the 1934 strike. The previous Streetcar Strike in 1917 still had an impact. Many in the strike leadership had their start with the I.W.W. And the Palmer Raids set the stage of suppression of dissent that continued.

1
Events

Coal-yards Strike
The strike began on February 7, 1934 when workers picketed the Minneapolis coal-yards. They prevented the delivery of heating coal. This part of the strike lasted three days.

2
Events

The Battle of Deputies Run
A major clash occurred on May 21, 1934 between the strikers, police, and Citizens Alliance deputies in the market district. The strikers succeeded in routing their opponents. Two deputies died.

3
Events

Women's Auxiliary
Women were active in the strike as commissary workers, nurses, picketers and organizers. Strike leader Marvel Scholl lead a protest march on City Hall.

4
Events

Bloody Friday Ambush
On July 20, 1934 the police used a decoy truck to lure picketers into an ambush. They shot 67 unarmed strikers. Henry Ness and John Belor died from their wounds.

5
Events

Henry Ness's Murder
One of the two strikers killed on Bloody Friday was Henry Ness. The funeral procession drew 40,000 solemn witnesses.

6
Events

Arrest of Strike Leaders
After Bloody Friday, the National Guard imprisoned strike organizers, including Vincent Dunne and others, at a stockade at the State Fair Grounds.

7
Events

Negotiations
There were many attempts by mediators to reach an agreement. The employers offered a contract to only the drivers and not the helpers. The strikers opposed it because it limited union membership.

8
Events

Victory Settlement
FDR sent representatives P.A. Donoghue and Father F. Haas to put pressure on the employers to make an agreement that guaranteed the right to organize. The strike ended on August 21, 1934.

Events

There were many moments during the strike that affected how it played out. Many smaller skirmishes fed into the larger ones. Some of the events weren't of a single time, such as the negotiations that had many iterations. And the Women's Auxiliary was an ongoing force that supported many aspects of the strike.

1
Context

Technology
In 1934 telephone communication was common and accessible. It allowed strikers to act promptly.

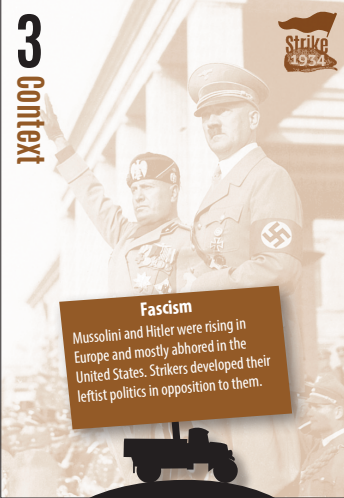

2
Context

Gangsters
John Dillinger and other gangsters operated in St. Paul and Minneapolis. The Depression had fostered the "Robin Hood" image of bank robbers who were popular as well as reviled.

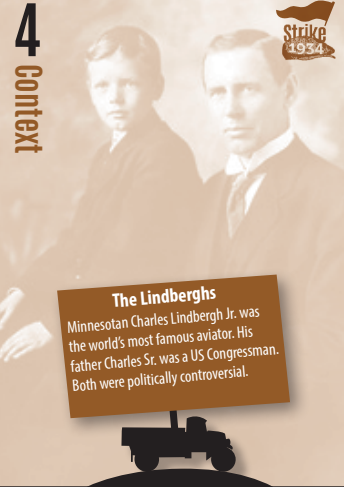

3
Context

Fascism
Mussolini and Hitler were rising in Europe and mostly abhorred in the United States. Strikers developed their leftist politics in opposition to them.

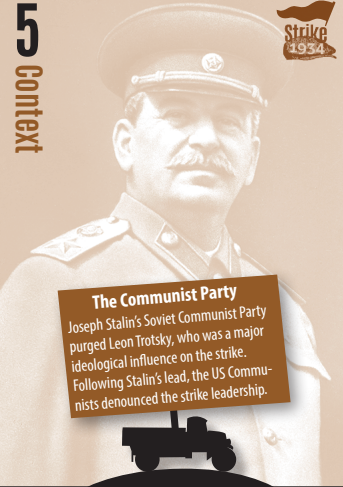

4
Context

The Lindberghs
Minnesotan Charles Lindbergh Jr. was the world's most famous aviator. His father Charles Sr. was a US Congressman. Both were politically controversial.

5
Context

The Communist Party
Joseph Stalin's Soviet Communist Party purged Leon Trotsky, who was a major ideological influence on the strike. Following Stalin's lead, the US Communists denounced the strike leadership.

6
Context

Trucking
Minneapolis was a major hauling and distribution center of the United States. Thousands of truck drivers were employed in the city's industry, but most were unorganized.

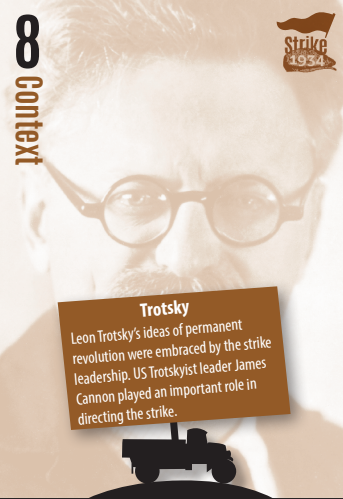

7
Context

Music
Musicians performed swing and folk music at the strike HQ. Popular songs included "Solidarity Forever" and "On the Picket Line."

8
Context

Trotsky
Leon Trotsky's ideas of permanent revolution were embraced by the strike leadership. US Trotskyist leader James Cannon played an important role in directing the strike.

Context

What was happening in 1934 in areas of technology, culture and politics influenced the strike. The larger environment affected how the strikers were motivated, acted and saw their role in the world. The conflict between Stalin and Trotsky was acted out in Minneapolis. Swing music filled the air and Hitler was their common nightmare.

1 Pros & Cons

Farmers
Local farmers resisted the strike initially because it interfered with their sales. Later they agreed to support it and provided food for the strikers.

2 Pros & Cons

National Recovery Act
The National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933 provided the right to organize a union. However, in practice it became ineffective through prolonged negotiations.

3 Pros & Cons

Governor Floyd Olson
The Farmer-Labor leader was a liberal supporter of the working class. However, he ordered the National Guard to intervene in the strike.

4 Pros & Cons

Mainstream media
The local newspapers, The Tribune and The Journal, covered the events of the strike but sympathized with business interests and described the strike as a violent riot.

5 Pros & Cons

President Roosevelt
FDR was a positive influence on the labor movement in many ways. However, during this strike, he favored the business labor interests and later had the strike leaders prosecuted (1941).

6 Pros & Cons

Public opinion
Some Minneapolis residents were bothered by the disruption caused by the strike and were critical of it. However, public support increased over time.

7 Pros & Cons

Use of force
Strikers were angry at the strikebreakers (scabs) and the brutality of the police and deputies. At times, the strikers' reaction was violent. Two deputies were killed.

8 Pros & Cons

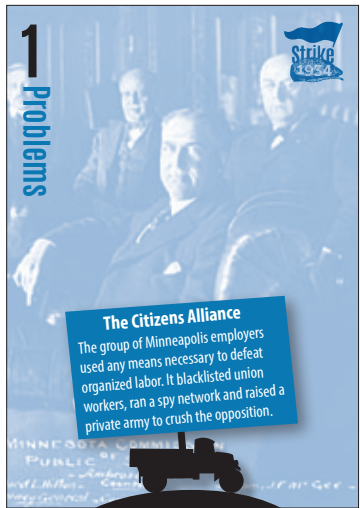

Political action
The Farmer-Labor Party's politics were favorable to the strike. However, the party's leader, Governor Olson, compromised with the employers' group (Citizens Alliance) that adamantly fought unions.

Pros & Cons

The relationships the strikers had to other players associated with the strike were often complicated. The Governor was a supporter of unions but became a "frenemy" as the pressure mounted. The strike had to deal also with the internal challenges to maintain discipline. And strikers had to keep a wary eye on public opinion, which could change rapidly.

1 Problems

The Citizens Alliance
The group of Minneapolis employers used any means necessary to defeat organized labor. It blacklisted union workers, ran a spy network and raised a private army to crush the opposition.

2 Problems

COMMUNIST PARTY
U.S.A.

Political infighting
The US Communist Party denounced the strike leadership because some (but not all) were Trotskyites.

3 Problems

City scope
The city was a vast area for the picketers to cover against the strikebreakers. It was difficult but strikers used mobile pickets or "flying squadrons" to maintain and control the truck ban.

4 Problems

The Police
The police served the Citizens Alliance and resorted to strike ambushes and murder. Chief Johannes colluded with Mayor Bainbridge to intimidate union picketers.

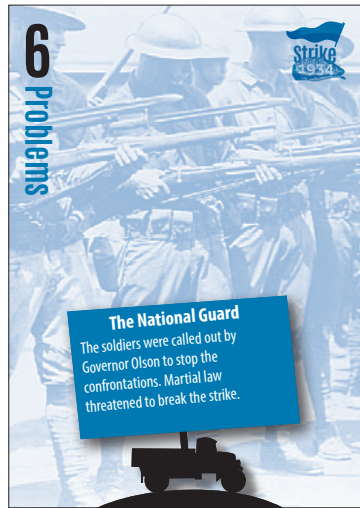

5 Problems

THE RED MENACE IS REAL!

Red-baiting
The media and Citizens Alliance led the propaganda against the strikers. They falsely depicted them all as communists, which provoked fears of revolution.

6 Problems

The National Guard
The soldiers were called out by Governor Olson to stop the confrontations. Martial law threatened to break the strike.

7 Problems

Union bureaucrats
Daniel Tobin, the Teamster president at the HQ in Indianapolis, opposed the strike. He tried to force the Local 574 activist union to comply with the government and business interests.

8 Problems

Spies
Spies were hired to infiltrate the strike. James O'Hara tricked picketers, including women, to go to a remote alley where they were attacked and beaten by police (The Tribune Alley Ambush).

Problems

The opposition to the strike had many forms. The Citizens Alliance was the most threatening and effective as a "Union Against Unions." The union bureaucrats were also a big hurdle to overcome. They also faced logistic challenges like maintaining control of the larger city area.

1 Solutions

Militancy
Strikers were willing to aggressively confront the police, employers' deputies and the National Guard. Many were arrested, wounded and two were killed.

2 Solutions

Inclusion
The truckers strike won broad support. This included other unions, small businesses, taxi drivers and the unemployed.

3 Solutions

Leadership
The strike was led by local workers, along with several national political figures. They were grassroots intellectuals with strong ties to the rank and file. Some followed the ideas of Trotsky.

4 Solutions

Solidarity
Tens of thousands rallied at the Minneapolis Parade Grounds to support the strike. Also many went to the streets to witness the funeral procession of strike martyr Henry Ness.

5 Solutions

Communication
The strikers published their own daily newspaper, The Organizer. It kept the participants informed as events occurred and strategies developed.

6 Solutions

Discipline
The union members stopped strike breakers by maintaining control of the city streets. The strikers were organized under a chain of command and became an effective force as a whole.

7 Solutions

Support
The union sustained members with medical care, a food commissary, music, telephones and a newspaper. Contributions were provided by other unions and residents.

8 Solutions

Strategy
Strikers had clear and limited demands. They insisted that the union be legally recognized. They were intent on winning a city-wide strike, not starting a revolution that would fail.

Solutions

The remarkable innovations and strengths of the strikers were what gained final success. They were self-reliant as well as skeptical. The strikers were unified, disciplined, aggressive and they had effective leaders.

Pieces of the Whole

The drawings were interpretations of the source photos. They were an attempt to isolate the different parts of the story and allow for personal expression that photos can't provide. Finally, they were brought together in a collage expressing the complexity of the strike. The outcome is what it is, a visual experience more than a literal depiction. Not exactly illustration, more like a dwelling on iconic images. Layering on. Taking away. Exploring meaning.

Perhaps the value of the collage imagery in this context is that it can help us understand that history is not static. The relevance of the past to the present is as uncertain and dynamic as the drawings that are made from them. History is a contested concept and never set. Perceptions change depending on the present. Drawings can have a life of their own. A game about history adds more complexities because the meaning comes from players interacting with each other. The game player's goal is to win. Hopefully the process of art making and game play can help us see some of the shifting and relevant sides of history. And at this point it can be useful and helpful to change the conditions today and those to come. And as in the case of the Minneapolis strike, to make things better.

Behind: Strike fighter

Bottom: 1934 Ford Truck

Top: Arrest of V.R. Dunne
Botton: Striker

Top: National Guardsman
Botton: Police and deputy

Top: Arrest of striker
Botton: Destitute

Top: Woman at commissary
Botton: Flight

Top: Game Turn Collage
Left: Farmers
Right: Fight

A New Center for Labor History

BY FRED MELO

OVER THE PAST three years, the East Side Freedom Library has taken shape as a nationally significant center for the preservation, celebration, and teaching of labor history. Its volunteer activists the husband-and-wife have filled the nooks of this historic Carnegie Library on Greenbrier Street with as many as 15,000 items. Many are books from local authors, immigrant narratives such as the official Hmong Archives, and Minnesota's labor history.

There's also work space for a Karen refugee weaving group, art retreats, author talks, films and two separate meditation circles.

The 8,000-square-foot structure, which dates to 1917, even hosts children's singalongs and "Solidarity Saturdays," where seasoned labor activists can meet immigrant rights activists, artists, and students. Indeed, the idea of being a "crossroads" where people can meet across historical eras, generations, and ethnic boundaries is the core idea of the Freedom Library. In the eyes of founders Peter Rachleff and Beth Cleary, these are all working people and it is important for them to tell, listen, and learn from each others' stories.

"There has never been a more important time to be building these kinds of bridges than now," said co-executive director Peter Rachleff two months ago. "Saturday we had a workshop in the morning for kids doing History Day projects, followed by a children's story hour for younger kids. And that afternoon we had Karen teenagers doing digital storytelling, with five-minute videos kids did at Washington Technology Magnet School."

The calendar for the rest of the week included two author talks, a discussion about labor's influence on progressive politics in Richmond, California, and a presentation on school funding from the St. Paul Federation of Teachers.

It's all part of a new role for the former Arlington Hills Library, and an unusual addition to the Payne-Phalen neighborhood. For more than a century and a half, immigrants have come to this neighborhood, built churches and organizations, and constructed their communities.

Their stories have been similar, whether they came from Sweden in the 1850s or Burma in the 2010s. But they have rarely known each others' stories, or the stories of their impact on Minnesota history.

Now the Freedom Library will be the home for Keith Christensen's "Game Turn." What better place to innovate in the teaching of labor history by using a newly designed game?

Top: The ESFL building
Middle: Participants in the library.
Bottom: Beth Cleary and Peter Rachleff

This article was adapted by Peter Rachleff from an article by Fred Melo which appeared in the Saint Paul Pioneer Press in March 2017.

Designing Play

Top middle: Players at the East Side Freedom Library with the earlier version of the game, providing feedback; Ramla Mohamud, Yao Yang, Andrea Lovoll, Paul Carlson, Fatuma Jama

Left: Hart Hornor

Left bottom: Stellan Christensen and Mats Jacobsson

Right: Peter Rachleff, Reno Gunderson, Gregory Poferi

THE GAME DEVELOPMENT included playing with numerous people who gave invaluable feedback on the game play and content. The question for the designer was how to make it accessible and yet meaningful as a way to tell the story. The issues included design consideration for an effective use of type, color and image use. The goal was to make the game engaging and playful. Also it was to try and make the learning about the history incidental, not forced. The conversations generated new ideas for the design. The process was iterative, meaning that it changed continuously. The card format was originally square as indicated in the pictures above. It changed to be more vertical and so became more efficient. The experiences showed that playing the game was more accessible when it related to other card games they already understood.

Seeing The East Side

How playing a game about a labor strike helped to understand a neighborhood

LEARNING FROM
The Minneapolis Truckers' Strike of 1934

THE GAME TURN PROJECT is based on a game about the Minneapolis Truckers' Strike of 1934. The game itself is structured to help players learn about different aspects of the strike including the problems they faced and their solutions. It was developed at the East Side Freedom Library.

In the fall of 2016, local community members participated in the project by playing the game, and then after discussing, went to the surrounding neighborhoods and made photographs. The images were about how they saw their environment in terms that related to the game and their own lives.

An empty lot is an eyesore and shows the loss of housing.

Speeding cars with no parking makes travel dangerous.

A No Trespassing sign sends the message of exclusion.

Surveillance videos send a non-welcoming message, chilling relationships.

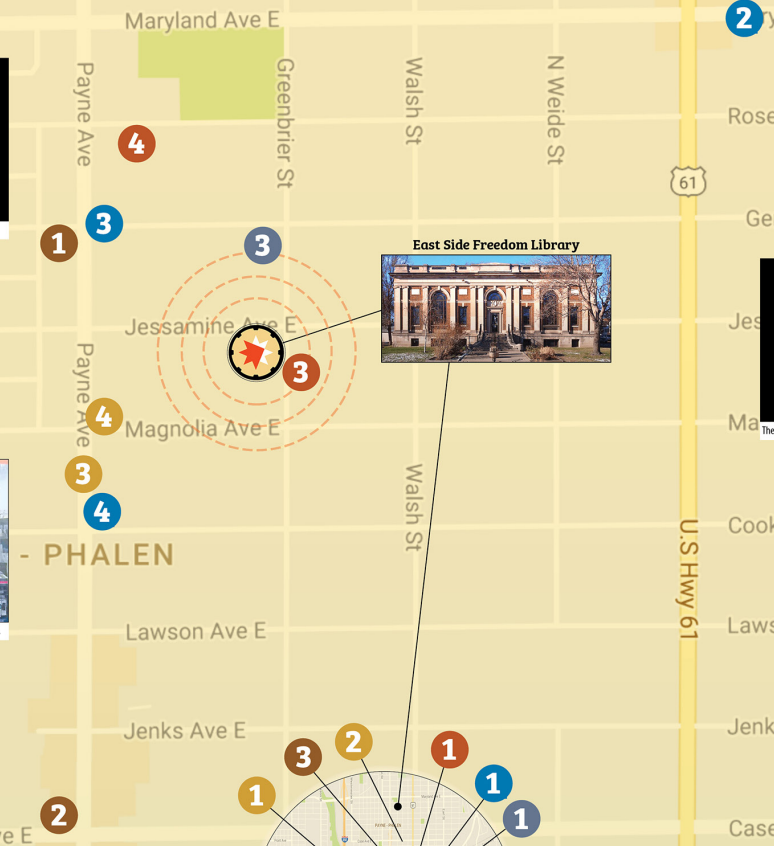

Street repair is disruptive but improves travel.

The Checker Bar was the first Hinong bar on the East Side.

Graffiti is self expression but can degrade community property.

East Side Freedom Library

This was one of the first Hinong medical centers in the East Side.

Sun Ray Library invites young people to an after school program.

The lawn sign supported the striking Allina Health hospital nurses in 2016.

A public art message expresses the need for inclusion.

Victorian houses represent quality residential living of the past.

Buses are essential but difficult to access in poor neighborhoods.

Railroad Island was one of the oldest neighborhoods of St. Paul.

The church serves as a gathering place in this immigrant neighborhood.

Eastside Financial Center provides counseling for the community.

Soccer is the common language and most popular sport for immigrant youth.

● PROBLEMS

● PROS & CONS

● SOLUTIONS

● BACKGROUND

● CONTEXT

- Categories of Seeing
- PROBLEMS The obstacles and challenges to recognize and confront
 - SOLUTIONS The ways and means that help make a better community
 - PROS & CONS The contradictions and complexities of social life
 - CONTEXT The environment and framework of a community
 - BACKGROUND Predecessors and history of current social life

Design: Keith Christensen

Producing Play

Bo Jacobsson welding the game table

Table and components installed at the East Side Freedom Library, May 27, 2017

The staff at 7 Corners Printing with printed table top; Rene Becker, Paula O'Conner, Pete Joseph, Paul Bengston

THE GAME WAS MADE for the East Side Freedom Library, which serves as a labor and an immigrant studies archive. It also is a community center for mixed use. The game project's challenge was to be presentable for use as a game as well as serve as a kind of history information vehicle. The expectation was that some would play the game and others would just want to read and view it. The installation concept was to express the character and drama of the history. The table was made to hold the game, a banner envelops the table, and large maps are attached. A drawer was made to hold the cards, chips and the book documentation. The process involved collaboration with many others. Artisan Bo Jacobsson was a major contributor who fabricated the metal table. The union staff at 7 Corners Printing provided the custom printing on the table as well as the cards, banners, maps, and chips.

Producing Play (continued)

Game inauguration: May 27, 2017 at the East Side Freedom Library. Participants included Linda Leighton, David Sundeen, Dan Ganley, Rosa Maria de la Cueva Peterson, Stellan Christensen, Kortland Burns and others not identified

REMEMBER
1934

Looking Back to Go Forward

Reenactment readings from actors conveyed the words of strikers of 1934

Left: Marching Teamster Local 120 members commemorated the strike // Middle: The street festival committee prepared the site and activities; Colleen Casey, Lisa Luinburg, Bob Kolstad, David Sundeen, Jeff Pilacinski, Jim McGuire, David Riehle// Right: Viewing the poster and photographic images that were hung on the building walls

REMEMBER 1934 IS A COLLECTIVE working to commemorate the hard work and sacrifice of workers who fought to overcome oppression and made Minneapolis a union town. The group includes a diverse array of workers, union members, retirees, teachers, students, artists and progressives. It has organized street festivals, picnic gatherings, labor history walking tours, and oral histories of descendants. It has also written, designed and installed a commemorative plaque and held an unveiling event for it.

Evening performance by Brother Ali

Top: Reenactor

Poster design by Kristin Dooley

Top middle: Art installation, sculptural images by Holly Krig, signs by Keith Christensen

Middle photo: Holly Krig and Kieren Frazier Knutson

Bottom middle: Brochure distributors Jakob and Stellan Christensen

Ricardo Levins Morales and colleagues for Northland Poster Collective

The collective has organized street fests at the site of the Bloody Friday incident in Minneapolis' North Loop. These have been held every five years on the anniversary July 22, 1934. The street fests have included participants performing living history and reading from memoirs of the 1934 era. The all-day event has included musical groups, performers and speeches. Political posters, memorabilia and books were presented and exchanged. Musicians included Paul Metsa, Larry Long, I Self Devine, The Strike, and Brother Ali. Installation art and enlarged newspaper articles from 1934 as well as historical photographs have made a supportive visual environment.

Street Festival 2014

Activist Abdul Kulane honored the strike and shared the problems of St. Cloud Somali workers

Top: A band with the marching Teamsters Local 120

Bottom: David Sundeen with crowd

Right: Poster by Keith Christensen

REMEMBER
1934

WE SUPPORT
LOCAL 574,
DOWN WITH THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE!

— Call for General Strike of all Minneapolis Workers

We were getting 90 cents a ton for hauling coal and we wanted a dollar...

We were working hard and starving to death.

— Harry Pfaff, Local 574 Driver

The confrontation was about power.

Bosses had it, and we didn't.
The strike is the only weapon.

— CHRIS MOE, Striker

47 men lay on improvised cots,

bodies riddled with bullet wounds.

MARVEL SCHOLL, the Strike's Women's Auxiliary

For many years a common laborer in this city was nothing more than a serf.

-ED RYAN, Policeman

Don't fail me now, boys.

— HENRY NESS, Local 574, mortally wounded striker

DOWN WITH POLICE TERROR AGAINST WORKERS!

- Call for General Strike of all Minneapolis Workers

I could be fired at any time without recourse at the employer's whim.
Something had to be done
to improve the situation, and that's why I joined the union.

— FARRELL DOBBS, Local 574 Driver

Outraged,
the women's auxiliary
mobilized. Hundreds of us marched on City Hall to protest the police attacks.

— Marvel Scholl, Local 574 Women's Auxiliary

Posters with quotes of strikers

REMEMBER
1934

Picnic 2014

Top: Sack races

Left: Spanish version flyer for the event

Middle: Randy Furst, Larry Long at the picnic recognizing descendants

Left: David Sundeen, Kathy Sundeen and Linda Leighton with plaque

Every five years REMEMBER 1934 has organized picnics commemorating the strike anniversary. These have been held at Minnehaha Park in South Minneapolis. In earlier years participants in the strike came and spoke about their experiences. There have been student history projects presented about the strike, potato sack races for children, music, and historical documentation. Speakers have included descendants, activists and historians.

Top: Descendents with commemorative images presented to them by the Remember 1934 group

Left: Picnic gathering

Left bottom: Cherrene Horazak

Top: Author of Revolutionary Teamsters, Brian Palmer speaking to the gathering

Left: Brian Palmer with Keith Christensen

Right: Author of A Union Against Unions, William Millikan

Commemorative Plaque

2015

On July 18, 2015 a commemorative plaque was installed by REMEMBER 1934 at the site of Bloody Friday. It was installed on the old Sherwin-Williams Paint Company building that was present in 1934. The event honored the sacrifices of the fallen and celebrated the legacy of the strike. Teamster Local 120 members, descendants, musicians, speakers and community folks attended.

Photo: MRLF

Top: The building at 701 3rd Street North where the plaque is installed

Middle: Keith Christensen, Bob Kolstad, Mei-Ling Anderson (Minneapolis City Planner) and David Riehle receiving the Minneapolis Heritage Preservation Commission approval to install the plaque

Bottom: Gail Martinson and Nadine Ness (The granddaughters of Henry Ness)

Top: 1935 photograph taken commemorating the death of Henry Ness, a striker killed on Bloody Friday at the site

Below: Commemorative plaque installed

Photo: MRLF

Photo: Diane Ersko

Top: Doug Drews and David Riehle installing plaque

Bottom: Mildred Johnson (widow of striker Chester Johnson) in front of plaque. She was the oldest living participant in the strike

Photo: Minneapolis Regional Labor Federation

Strike descendants with photos of their relatives by the plaque

Photo: MRLF

Photo: MRLF

Top: Thomas Keegel, General Secretary Emeritus of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters: "We're at war today... History repeats itself..."

Middle: Ben Egerman and Emmett Doyle

Right: Bob Kolstad serving as MC of the plaque dedication

Photo: MRLF

Top: The gathering at the plaque dedication
Left: Building owner Cliff Bruber (site host of the plaque) with Keith Christensen

Photo: MRLF

Top: Local 120 Teamster truck parked for backdrop use at the plaque unveiling

Below: Heart of a Tinman, Polly Nelson and Dwight Christensen

Credits

Design, artwork and photographs by Keith Christensen or as indicated

Many photographic images used are courtesy of the Minnesota Historical Society

Additional photographs: East Side Freedom Library, Carina Jacobsson, Unknown internet sources (historical)

Some participant images are from Labor's Turning Point, The film was produced by Martin Duffy (the revised version was produced by Randy Croce). See: www.minneapolis1934.org

Proofreading: Hart Hornor, Dave Riehle, Bill Gorcica, Gregory Poferl

Printing: 7 Corners Printing

Metal work: Bo Jacobsson

Keith Christensen is a fiscal year 2016 recipient of an Artist Initiative grant from the Minnesota State Arts Board. This activity is made possible by the voters of Minnesota through a grant from the Minnesota State Arts Board, thanks to a legislative appropriation from the arts and cultural heritage fund.

Game Turn IS A GAME PROJECT ABOUT a major turning point in labor history. The Minneapolis Truckers' Strike of 1934 was a monumental battle for the right to unionize. AND THEY WON. The book documents the game elements including the game board and cards. It provides background information on the strike including an overview, a map of key locations as well as a collection of portraits that identify participants. The game was installed at the East Side Freedom Library in St. Paul and the reader is informed of this institution's relevance and role as a labor archive. The game was extended by local residents who played the game and learned of the strike. Later they took discerning photos of the neighborhood that related to the game. Their pictures and comments are documented on a map. Another dimension of the strike is explored in interpretive drawings. The project also shares some of the ongoing efforts of the Remember 1934 collective that continues to commemorate the strike.

